We experimentally demonstrate a technique for shaping the temporal quantum waveform of narrowband time-frequency entangled photon pairs generated in a cold atomic ensemble via four-wave mixing by periodically modulating the two input classical lasers. We show that the input field profiles can be transferred to the biphoton wave packets, and it is possible to generate nonclassical paired photons with a predesigned arbitrary shape of the correlation function.